66 ABOUT US
Since food is a very serious business in Japan, it’s no surprise that Japanese food is one of the most popular cuisines in the world.

Time-tested preparation techniques, combined with great attention paid to the provenance of ingredients, is what lies at the heart of Japanese cooking, and even the utensils used are just as highly valued as the chefs preparing the mouthwatering food.

This attention to detail means that you will dine like royalty throughout your stay, whether you’re eating in a fine dining restaurant or sampling a hot broth at a neighbourhood noodle bar.

Eating out in Japan can feel like a private performance that invigorates all your senses. From the displays of fresh seafood in tanks to the dramatic open kitchens with flaming grills and the ceremony of ancient food preparation techniques, the drama of Japanese dining will leave you with a satisfied palate and unforgettable memories.

Flavour balance, skill and a desire for perfection set Japanese cuisine apart. It’s no wonder it has been distinguished with a UNESCO cultural heritage award. When eating in Japan, expect to be served the best seafood in the world, beef that melts in the mouth like butter, and the most well-presented and best-tasting sashimi on the planet.

With Tokyo, Osaka, and Kyoto featuring prominently in international coverage of fine dining, there’s no shortage of outstanding eating options. And it’s not just Japanese cuisine on offer, since the commitment to excellence extends into a very wide offering of cuisines from around the world.

To elevate your Japanese taste experience why not enlist the expertise of a private chef who can take you on a personal food tour of Japan, intimately discuss the creations with you and reveal all the nuances in the tastes of Japanese cuisine?
It will come as perhaps no surprise that Japan has so many award-winning restaurants, given its reputation for fine cuisine. There are endless opportunities to dine in exceptional establishments, whether you wish to try something on the experimental side or keep things uber-traditional.

SHINKANSEN

Japan is world famous for the efficiency of its rail network and is home to the renowned high-speed shinkansen, or bullet train, the country’s premier train service. Shinkansen trains are a great way to travel long distances between the country’s major cities. Travellers can choose from two levels of reserved seating class on most shinkansen routes: Business and Ordinary, with even the latter proving an extremely comfortable option for most journeys. Some trains also feature the new luxury GranClass cars.

Shinkansen business class travellers in the ‘Green Cars’ will enjoy a more spacious experience as this carriage solely caters for ticket-holders. For a more comfortable and stress-free journey for business travellers, amenities such as power outlets, reading lights, footrests, leg warmers and blankets are dependent on the route.

The most luxurious travel experience can be experienced with a GranClass shinkansen train ticket. Available on the “Tohoku / Hokkaido Shinkansen” route, which links Tokyo and Hakodate, and the “Hokuriku Shinkansen” route between Tokyo and Kanazawa, GranClass is considered the shinkansen’s ‘First Class’ and the ultimate way to travel Japan by rail. With its ergonomically-designed leather seats and complimentary slippers, GranClass guarantees optimum comfort for the discerning traveller.

On some routes, GranClass travellers are assigned a dedicated cabin attendant for the duration of the journey, and a Japanese bento box and a refreshing beverage are delivered right to your seat.

The luxury begins even before you travel, as GranClass ticket holders can use the View Gold Lounge, a premium pre-departure lounge for passengers travelling from Tokyo Station. You can relax in the lounge for up to 90 minutes prior to departure (open daily from 8:00 AM to 6:00 PM).

Yet regardless of the class, high-standards of Japanese design and engineering and customer service will ensure a superior experience on your shinkansen adventure.
