JAPANESE GARDENS

The classic Japanese garden is an artificial garden that reproduces natural scenic beauty in a heightened intensity. Its charm lies in its subtle, highly sophisticated layout in a limited space. The aim of Japanese landscape gardening, which has a long history of development, is to create a scenic composition by arranging rocks, trees, shrubs and running water in such a way as to create the sweep of a vast landscape.

Japanese gardens are usually referred to as the “hill garden” (“tsukiyama”) and the “waterless stream garden” (“karesansui”). The hill garden features a hill usually combined with a pond and a stream. It can be viewed from various vantage points, as you stroll along the paths, or appreciate it from within a house to which it is attached. Fine specimens of this style are the gardens of Tenryuji Temple and Saihoji Temple, both in Kyoto. In the dry landscape garden, rocks and sands form the main elements, the sea being symbolized not by water but by a layer of sand with furrows suggestive of the rippling movement, and waterfalls by an arrangement of rocks. Examples of this style are the gardens of Ryoanji Temple and Daitokuji Temple, also in Kyoto.

With the introduction of the tea ceremony in the 14th century, the chaniwa (garden attached to the tea-ceremony house) came to be designed and laid out. Actually, it is not a garden but a narrow path leading up to the chashitsu (tearoom proper). The aim of the designer of this style was to create a feeling of solitude and detachment from the world. A tea garden is mainly featured by the placement of stepping stones.

* Listed in this leaflet are principal Japanese gardens in Kyoto, Tokyo and other areas.

* Most of the tea gardens are not open to the public.

* The gardens are mostly closed from Dec. 28 to Jan. 4.

* Ticket windows are usually closed 30 min. or 1 hr. before closing time.

- ㉓ Ryoanji Temple (龍安寺): Dry garden constructed in the 15th century. Noted for stone arrangements in a rectangular space of white sand. A world cultural heritage site. With the ultimate beauty in its simplest form, removing everything that is unnecessary, you are able to actually experience the thoughts of Zen Buddhism, facing the garden and rejecting any superfluous explanations. Near Ryoanji-mae Bus Stop.
Addr.: 13 Goryonoshitamachi, Ryoanji, Ukyo-ku, Kyoto
Open: 8:00–17:00 (Mar.–Nov.), 8:30–16:30 (Dec.–Feb.) Admission: ¥500
- ㉔ Saihoji Temple (西芳寺): Famous as a moss temple. A world cultural heritage site. It consists of upper and lower layers of arranged rockwork, the spring pond garden on the flat ground and the dry landscape on the mountainside, creating a world of “yugen” (quiet beauty or the subtle and the profound) with its 100 or so different kinds of moss and tree groves. A landscape garden in the go-round style or boating style. Reservations are required to visit. Near Koke-dera Bus Stop or walk from Kami-Katsura Sta. on Hankyu Arashiyama Line.
Addr.: 56 Matsuo-Jingatani-cho, Nishikyo-ku, Kyoto
Note: How to Apply for Admission
Apply by mail from one week to 2 months ahead of the date of your intended visit. (Application must reach the temple at least one week before your visit.). On a return postcard, please write your preferred date, time, representative's mailing address, name and number of people. Sightseeing time is one and a half hours, but depending on that day's religious event, time for sightseeing differs. Cost is more than ¥3,000. Visitors participate Kito (chant) and Shakyo (sutra copying) before seeing the garden. Apply to: Saihoji Sanpaikakari, 56 Matsuo-Jingatani-cho, Nishikyo-ku, Kyoto 615-8286 Tel: 075-391-3631
- ㉕ Shisendo Temple (詩仙堂): Stroll garden with running water “yari-mizu,” laid out in the 17th century by Ishikawa Jozan (1583–1672) a poet, scholar and the designer of the “sozu” or “shishi-odoshi.” The occasional tapping sound of “sozu” reverberates in the tranquility of the Chinese style garden, creating a refined atmosphere. Noted for the beauty of azaleas in spring and tinted foliage in autumn. 10-min. walk from Ichijoji-Sagarimatsu-cho Bus Stop.
Addr.: Monguchicho, Ichijoji, Sakyo-ku, Kyoto
Open: 9:00–17:00 Closed: May 23 Admission: ¥500
- ㉖ Shoren-in Temple (青蓮院): Stroll gardens constructed by Soami & Kobori Enshu in the 16th century. The straight-line shaped washbasin donated by Toyotomi Hideyoshi is a rare masterpiece. 3-min. walk from Jingu-michi Bus Stop.
Addr.: 69-1 Sanjobo-cho, Awataguchi, Higashiyama-ku, Kyoto
Open: 9:00–17:00 Admission: ¥500

⑳ Tenryuji Temple (天龍寺): Landscape garden for strolling and viewing from within a building constructed in the 14th century. The main motifs of this garden, which almost seems as though it were a landscape drawing in Indian ink, are Ryumon Falls and a stone bridge. A landscape of mountains, rivers and the ocean is presented with a pond and the above two in the center. Ryumon is a rapid current ravine which lies on the border of China's Yungxian and Wanxian. There is a 3-tier waterfall that even fish can't go up, but there's a legend that if fish could go up the waterfall, they would become dragons. This represents the process of a zen priest attaining enlightenment after strict practice. The stone bridge is a symbol of the first step into the state of enlightenment. 2-min. walk from Arashiyama Sta. on Keifuku Dentetsu Arashiyama Line.

Addr.: Susukinobaba-cho, Saga Tenryuji, Ukyo-ku, Kyoto

Open: 8:30–17:30 (–17:00 Oct. 21–Mar. 20) Admission: ¥500

㉑ Tofukuji Fundain Temple (東福寺芬陀院): Dry landscape garden laid out in the 15th century by Sesshu (1420–1506), a famous painter. The Kame-ishi or Tortoise Stone placed in the moss-covered garden surrounded by bamboo seems almost as if it were living and about to move. 10-min. walk from JR or Keihan Tofukuji Sta. (in the Tofukuji Temple compound)

Addr.: 15-803 Hommachi, Higashiyama-ku, Kyoto

Open: 9:00–17:00 (–16:00 Dec.–Mar.) Admission: ¥300

㉒ Tofukuji Hojo (東福寺方丈): Dry gardens in four different types rebuilt in 1938. The north garden is famous for the moss and square stones creating an Ichimatsu checkered design. The coloring of leaves are exquisitely beautiful viewed from the roofed passage called Tsuutenkyo. 10-min. walk from JR or Keihan Tofukuji Sta. (in the Tofukuji Temple compound)

Addr.: 15-778 Hommachi, Higashiyama-ku, Kyoto

Open: 9:00–16:00, 8:30–16:00 (Nov.), 9:00–15:30 (Dec.–Mar.) Admission: ¥400

㉓ Tofukuji Kaisando Temple (東福寺開山堂): Pond garden and dry garden, both constructed in the 18th century. The left side of the narrow passage from the entrance is an ichimatsu patterned dry landscape in the Zen Buddhist style. On the right is a pond garden in the Chikuzan fashioned samurai household study style. The two combined create an exquisite taste. 10-min. walk from JR or Keihan Tofukuji Sta..

Addr.: 15-778 Hommachi, Higashiyama-ku, Kyoto

Open: 9:00–16:00, 8:30–16:00 (Nov.), 9:00–15:30 (Dec.–Mar.) Admission: ¥400

㉔ Tojiin Temple (等持院): The family temple of successive Ashikaga Shogun generals. The west garden with its Fuyochi Pond is of a multifarious composition, with its trimmed hedges and dried-up waterfall work set against Kinugasa-yama and Ishibashi Bridge. Stroll garden constructed in the 14th century, and Fuyochi Pond was built in the 18th century. Near Tojiin-minami Bus Stop.

Addr.: 63 Kitamachi, Tojiin, Kita-ku, Kyoto
